Free AVS Video Editor 7.1.2.262 (menin) Patch (trial) -Q: How to drag files from a folder I have a folder named "Data" with several files inside, which I want to be able to be drag and dropped on my Windows Form. I'm trying to make a program that will do the following: Windows Forms form with label text in a row (a title) A button to delete the file from the list A listbox to show the list of files in the Data folder. The user drags and drops a file from the folder into the listbox. I've found a few examples on how to do this but they all ask the user to have their files in the same folder as the program, but I need to be able to get files from a different location, so that the program will open and list the files in the "Data" folder. A: There are several different ways to approach this, and here are several ideas: You can use EnumerateFile function for this. This is a low level way of doing it. You can use SHGetFileInfo function to get information of the file. This is more advanced way of doing it. You can use the Win32 API which is the most powerful way of doing it. But my personal recommendation is to use EnumerateFile function. It's simple to implement and gives you lots of power. A: Here is code f678e9f9e
